Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia

Only 2.4% of Mongolia's population of 3 million are professing Christians. Historically, Mongolia has been a difficult region to minister to due to the local religion, culture, and laws of the country.

Flourishing Futures is a mission organization that has ministered in Ulaanbataar for the last 15 years. Although the ministry started with a single family, it has since grown to include local workers that were themselves ministered to. The goal of the ministry is to bring the message of the Gospel to locals through providing for the physical and social needs of the community as proselytizing is not legal in Mongolia.

The SP team will partner with Flourishing Futures in their work through distributing food, visiting families, and providing teaching and games to those living in the Ger district.
